Active-site titration of thiol-disulfide oxidoreductases using the dithiothreitol-iodoacetamide system. Titration of thiol groups present on active-site cysteines in proteins or other disulfide-containing compounds with dithiothreitol (DTT) and methyl iodide followed by I-acetamidomethylation is a useful method for probing active-site reactivity of thiol-disulfide oxidoreductases. We demonstrate that this method is applicable to the Cu(I)Zn superoxide dismutase from Escherichia coli as a model for thiol-disulfide oxidoreductases. Results obtained with the Cu(I)Zn superoxide dismutase confirm a rapid first-order kinetics of DTT-induced inhibition, as has been observed with cysteine-rich proteins Q.
